

The Mountain and the Climber

Once upon a time, a young climber set out to scale a mighty mountain. People around him said the peak was too high, the path too harsh, and the winds too wild. But the climber smiled and said, "I'll go one step at a time."

Every morning, he rose with the sun and took a few more steps up the mountain. When he slipped, he rested. When it rained, he waited. But he never stopped believing he could reach the top.

Years passed, and one fine morning, the climber stood at the summit. He looked around-not with pride, but with peace. The view was breathtaking, but it wasn't just the mountain that had changed. It was he himself-stronger, wiser, and gentler.

The mountain had taught him patience, perseverance, and humility.

Sometimes, the journey is long, but every step you take changes you.

Keep climbing.
